

FLIGHT CENTRE Unbeatable

Sun Peaks
3 Nights + 2-Day Lift Pass
$274 per person
INCLUDES action in the Village and 2-day lift ticket.
Conditions apply, see note at far below.
1 866 967 5402

TRAVEL

FLIGHT CENTRE Unbeatable

Las Vegas Air + 3 Nights
$269 per person
INCLUDES 4-star airfare, airport transfers and 3-star accom on the Strip. UPGRADABLE to 4-star accom packages including show tickets from $124.
Conditions apply, see note at far below.
1 866 967 5402

SATURDAY, JANUARY 5 | 2013 | EDITOR CARALYN CAMPBELL, 604.605.2784 | CACAMPBELL@SUNPROVINC.COM

Okonjima's Grand African Villa is an ultra-luxurious bush hideaway overlooking a watering hole deep within a reserve.

MARK SISSONS/SPECIAL TO THE SUN

Namibia offers adventurous travellers a unique luxury safari experience

MARK SISSONS
SPECIAL TO THE SUN

CDAMARALAND, Namibia burning through the bone-dry Huab River bed, our clay-baked Land Cruiser chases the setting sun and some of Africa's most elusive inhabitants.

"We're extremely lucky to run into such a large herd of desert-adapted elephants," shouts guide Tristan Cowley over the roaring engine of what is likely the only safari vehicle within fifty kilometres in this remote northwestern region of Namibia called Damaraland. After mounting a huge dune, we drop down to join Namibia's legendary desert survival specialists on their long march to water.

Desert-adapted elephants are so behaviourally attuned to the hyper arid conditions of the Namib Desert that they routinely travel more than 200 kilometres without drinking en route to watering holes near ancient, ephemeral riverbeds. They are also far gentler on the fauna they ingest than most elephants, perhaps innately understanding that knocking over the precious few trees and bushes that sustain them will be their ecological undoing.

One would think that having more than 20 of these mythical behemoths virtually to ourselves would be a rare treat. Only about 500 desert-adapted elephants remain in Namibia, the only place besides the fringes of the Sahara in Mali where they are found.

But in this safe and serene country with more wildlife than people – along with spectacular desert landscapes, a ghostly coastline of sand, fog and shipwrecks, ancient artistic treasures, authentic tribes and some of the best safari camps and lodges in Africa

— the exceptional is the norm. Which can mean refreshingly uncharted adventures for even the most seasoned of safari connoisseurs.

Space is Namibia's ace. Twice the size of California, this former South African protectorate that finally attained independence in 1990 after a protracted guerrilla war contains only 2.3 million people.

Only Greenland and Mongolia have fewer inhabitants per square kilometre. And with around 200,000 square kilometres (a remarkable 25 per cent of its total land area) constitutionally set aside for nature reserves, Namibia feels like one giant super safari park.

In a continent where nature is demarcated by fences and reserves, often turning locals into trespassers and in some cases, poachers on their own ancestral lands, Namibia's conservancy program is a rare conservation success story. In one of the few places in Southern Africa that is completely unfenced, desert-adapted animals can move and migrate unhindered and in relative safety because the local people are no longer their relentless adversaries.

The happy result? In stark contrast to the rest of Africa, poaching has decreased to nearly negligible levels in Namibia.

It's currently the only country where free-roaming lion populations are actually increasing. It has the world's largest population of black rhino, many of which are being transferred out of National Parks and into communally held conservancies. And it is home to more than 50 per cent of the world's remaining cheetahs, making Namibia the cat's meow for carnivore lovers.

CONTINUED ON PAGE G2

ONLINE

World of pictures

From food fights to exotic sights, this gallery of the top travel photos of 2012 is a feast for the eyes.

INSIDE | G5

B.C. Snow Scene

From safety on the slopes, to an American magazine that doesn't know Whistler belongs to us, to snowboard competition – the buzz in B.C.

INSIDE | G6

Ports & Bows

Norwegian Epic defies the skeptics by packing them in with top-notch entertainment and gourmet cuisine at affordable prices.

CONTINUED | FROM PAGE G1

Pioneering conservation efforts save ancient ecosystem

"Namibia is unique due to the fact that we have more predators and more prey outside our national parks than any other country," says Africat Foundation director Donna Hansen as she feeds resident orphaned cheetahs their morning portion of bovine flesh.

One of Africa's most progressive large predator research and rehabilitation centres, Africat is located in Okonjima Nature Reserve, three hours drive north of Namibia's compact, laid-back capital of Windhoek. Since opening in 1993, the foundation has rescued more than 1,000 cheetahs and leopards on Namibian farmland, successfully reintroducing more than 85 per cent of them back into the wild.

Tall, blond and packing a pistol, Hansen shows me around 22,000-hectare Okonjima, carved from land her family once farmed. On these open plains, occasionally broken by the remnants of ancient sandstone outcrops, rehabilitated big cats hone their hunting skills before they're reintroduced into the wild. Volunteers from around the world help the Hansens restore habitats and care for dozens of cheetahs and other rescued wildlife. And Okonjima guests can opt to stay in spacious traditional thatched chalets a short stroll from the original Hansen-family farmhouse. Or splurge on the Grand African Villa, the ultra-luxurious bush hideaway overlooking a watering hole deep within the reserve where Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie stayed during the birth of their daughter Shiloh.

Space (as in seen from space) certainly applies to the massive burnt orange dunes near Sossusvlei (pronounced SOS-suh-vlay), a day's drive west of Windhoek. Rising out of the Namib Desert like silent, star-shaped sentinels, they tower as high as a 60-storey skyscraper over Namib Naukluft Park, Africa's largest conservation area. I reach the summit of one dune just in time to catch the rising sun casting shadows on rows of silicon pyramids that mark the entrance to an ocean of sand flowing like the way to Namibia's notorious Skeleton Coast, graveyard of countless shipwrecks throughout the centuries. Surreal as it is, serene, this vast alien landscape feels like the enormous backdrop of a sci-fi movie, which has been travelled in numerous Hollywood and Bollywood blockbusters.

Later that day I feel like the star of my own sci-fi epic, cruising through vegetated dune belts and endless stretches of golden grassy savannah on a quad bike in NamibRand Nature Reserve as ostrich and gemsbok race alongside in the distance. Probably the largest private nature reserve in Southern Africa at more than 170,000 hectares, NamibRand was created to help protect and conserve the unique ecology and wildlife of the southwest Namib Desert, one of the world's driest ecosystems.

Spanning more than 400,000 acres, NamibRand Nature Reserve is the largest private nature reserve in Southern Africa.

Out here amid some of the planet's most beguilingly unspoiled desert vistas, visitors can enjoy utter tranquility and pampering at five-star retreats like Sossusvlei Desert Lodge and Welwedans, a selection of small and elegant safari camps, proceeds from which go toward maintaining the reserve. Retiring after a gourmet "bush dinner" to the veranda of my spacious wooden Welwedans suite elevated above the dunes, I contemplate the darkest, most starlit sky I've ever seen and strain to hear the lonesome call of a lone jackal howling from across the otherwise silent surface of this magical moonscape.

Species adapt to the desert in Damaraland's Etosha National Park.

If Sossusvlei and NamibRand feel like restorative desert isolation chambers, the UNESCO World Heritage site Twyfelfontein is ancient art therapy.

Multicoloured rock strata and minerals exposed to the elements in fantastical shapes and colours, Twyfelfontein's 2,500 prehistoric engravings depict handprints and abstract circular motifs, along with elephant, giraffe, kudu, lion, rhinoceros, zebra and ostrich.

Admiring these alfresco galleries painted in blood, clay, ochre and plant extracts on boulders and slabs of red sandstone scattered about the hillside, I picture the ancient artists who created them — perhaps during shamanistic rituals while their wild models followed age-old migration routes across the surrounding countryside — a tableau that has changed little in the thousands of years since.

Today, thanks in large part to Namibia's pioneering program of land conservancies that have handed back control over wildlife management and tourism to the local indigenous communities, the descendants of those prehistoric animals immortalized at Twyfelfontein remain very much in the picture. Their freedom still largely unhindered, desert-adapted black rhinos, lions, elephants and cheetah continue to roam across the breathtakingly beautiful open spaces of this African anomaly — a desert rose by any other name.

IF YOU GO

When to go:

Late winter until the beginning of summer (June till November) is the best time to go to Namibia. Winter (May to September) temperatures in the interior range from 18°C to 25°C during the day. Summer (October to April) average interior temperatures range from 20°C to 34°C during the day.

CONTINUED ON FACING PAGE

FROM PREVIOUS PAGE

Getting there:

Air Namibia (www.airnamibia.com.na) flies to Windhoek from Frankfurt, as well as offering frequent daily connections for passengers arriving in Johannesburg aboard daily South African Airways (www.fly-saa.com) flights from New York and Washington. Air Namibia also operates a limited internal service.

Getting around:

Navigating Namibia is remarkably easy for all levels of travelers. Roads are generally good for self-driving and routes well marked.

Safety:

Namibia is a reasonably safe, peaceful country and is not involved in any wars.

If you are alert and take some common sense precautions, you should have no problems.

Should you require medical assistance, Namibia's hospitals are modern and capable of attending to whatever needs you may have.

Where to stay:

The Olive Guesthouse is an intimate luxury boutique hotel in a tranquil corner of Windhoek. It features seven deluxe suites, each individually decorated to reflect a different region of Okonjima's Grand African Villa is an ultra-luxurious bush hideaway overlooking a watering hole deep within the reserve where Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie stayed.

Namibia. (www.theolive-namibia.com)

Home to the Africat Foundation (www.africat.org), Okonjima (www.okonjima.com) offers four different styles of luxury accommodation ranging from a sumptuous private villa and traditional thatched roof suites to an exclusive self-catering campsite.

The Wolwedans Collection features a selection of small and elegant safari camps, each set against a backdrop of exquisite desert scenery in the heart of the NamibRand Nature Reserve. (www.wolwedans.com)

Also set in the heart of the NamibRand Nature Reserve, Sossusvlei Desert Lodge offers spacious and serene five-star suites complete with dramatic skylights for late night stargazing, as well as a selection of experiences ranging from quad biking to ballooning. (www.andbeyondafrica.com)

Recommended outfitters:

Vancouver-based Heritage Safari Company (www.heritage-safaris.com / 1-888-301-1713) and Seattle based African Safari Company (www.africansafarico.com / 1.800.414.3090) can both arrange complete luxury Namibia itineraries, including the locations and accommodation featured in this story.

More info:

For more on Namibia, visit www.namibiatourism.com.na.

READER POSTCARDS

Have you been on a great vacation or explored a little-known destination? Tell us about it.

Send a photo and a small write up (no more than 600 words) to travel@sunprovince.com and we'll consider it for publication.

